I recently spent 15 months as interim Provost. It engaged me in the rich, vibrant intellectual community that is UConn. As a land-grant institution we have a sacred mission to serve the citizens of our stateall of the citizens of our state. We must prioritize access to educational opportunity, and we must create a diverse community in which all of our students feel welcome.

I am glad to be back in the School of Business and to be working with our faculty, staff, and alumni on behalf of our talented and committed student body. The times are challenging, COVID-19 is one challenge. Supporting first-generation college students as part of a diverse and inclusive community is another.

In this Dean's Report, we address some of those challenges. As educators, we provide life-transforming opportunities to our students. For our young undergraduates it is not only about their growth as aspiring professionals but also becoming accomplished community members, leaders, and citizens. For our graduate students, it is not only about their enhanced knowledge base and skill in their professions, but also about becoming principled leaders who embrace the importance of corporate social responsibility. Ultimately our students will become leaders for their communities and their companies.

Simply put, this is our mission; aiding our students to become the best versions of themselves. We seek to help them become strong voices for global prosperity while realizing that global prosperity begins locally. Global prosperity is about health, education, freedom from hunger, physical safety, and human rights broadly conceived. As we each do our part to use our knowledge and skill to produce efficiently and to share the fruits of our labor fairly. we are building that global prosperity one community at a time.

I am very glad to be part of this exciting, inspiring, collective journey.

Dean & Auran J. Fox Chair in Business

How did you get into your career field?

I joined the School of Business in 1999 as an administrative assistant in the Undergraduate Programs Office. I always tried to give extra attention to minority students because there were very few of them, and as a first-generation college student myself, I knew the struggles of navigating student life and the college experience. I had the opportunity to lead the School's Diversity and Inclusion Office in 2008-09 when UConn became a recipient of the grant that funded the office following a three-year vacancy.

What are the priorities of the Office of Diversity and Inclusion?

Our priorities are in recruitment, retention, support, graduation, and employment. In working with our corporate partners, we have a three-pronged approach: the first is scholarship/financial assistance, the second is mentoring, and the third is helping our students obtain strong internship opportunities that will lead to employment.

One of our successful programs is Travelers EDGE, which addresses all these areas but also includes a five-week summer bridge program in partnership with UConn Student Support Services that allows our students to take classes and develop key skills, like study skills and time management. I would love to see that program expanded to serve a larger number of incoming business students.

What could Connecticut do to offer more opportunities to students of

We don't have a shortage of minority students applying nor a shortage of students with ability. We have a K-12 educational system that rewards those who are from privileged communities and disadvantages those from less affluent communities. While our diversity enrollment at UConn has increased, it is not to the level where it could be. If we want to make significant change in our diversity enrollment, we cannot continue to use a system that we know is biased and is built on a racially and economically segregated school

Meet Seanice Austin

Director of the School of Business'

Office of Diversity and Inclusion

and a 2002 UConn alumna

Colleges and universities that want systemic change have to champion for change in society. They can't just change their own institutions, but have to reach outside the university gates. Addressing the racial wealth gap, economic development, and equality has to be part of the conversation. Without those efforts, anything you do will be a Band-Aid, not a solution for the problem. Every college has to use its resources to impact change in the country. We need to lend our power to those who have a blueprint and a plan. Land-grant universities, like UConn, have an obligation to do so because they are supported by all the people of the state.

What advice do you offer students?

My advice to all UConn students, and young people in general, is to continue to challenge the system of racial inequality and injustice, even if it means breaking or undoing what has become accepted norms in our country. The current movement for racial justice is being led by Gen Z, which understands that change rarely occurs without disruption. In the words of the late U.S. Representative and civil rights leader John Lewis, they should continue to "get in good trouble, necessary trouble."

School Remains Committed to Programs that Open Doors, Enhance Diversity

The leadership at the School of Business has long been focused on increasing the number of Black students and faculty members and ensuring that UConn is a welcoming place for all. Here are some of the programs we embrace:

The Ph.D. Project: LIConn is a partner school with this nonprofit organization, which serves as a catalyst for Black, Hispanic, and Native Americans to pursue their doctorates and become business professors. phdproject.org

The School recently launched a Financial Literacy Innovation Program (FLIP) for high school students in East Hartford. The brainchild of alumnus Joe LaBrosse '85, CFO and founder of Grove Property Fund LLC, the program is taught by UConn faculty and staff, and LIConn. undergrads serve as mentors.

The School offers a Diversity in Business Lecture Series, open to undergraduate and graduate students. The well-attended program culminates in a certificate in diversity leadership.

Travelers EDGE (Empowering Dreams for Graduation and Employment), established by Travelers in 2007, provides a unique approach to education for underrepresented students. including financial help, career advice, and internships. The School accepts five students from the highly selective program each year. s.uconn.edu/edg

The Hartford Promise is a largescale college scholarship fund and college success program for Hartford public school students, offering high achievers a college scholarship of up to $20,000. LIConn offers an additional scholarship to make their college dreams more affordable hartfordpromise.org
